

Web 2.0
Web 2.0 is the second generation of the World Wide Web, characterized by user-generated content, social networking, and collaborative software. It emphasizes the ability of users to interact with and create content.

Web 1.0
Web 1.0 is the first generation of the World Wide Web, characterized by static pages and one-way communication. It was primarily used for information retrieval and basic web browsing.

Web 2.0
Web 2.0 is the second generation of the World Wide Web, characterized by user-generated content, social networking, and collaborative software. It emphasizes the ability of users to interact with and create content.

Web 2.0
Web 2.0 is the second generation of the World Wide Web, characterized by user-generated content, social networking, and collaborative software. It emphasizes the ability of users to interact with and create content.

Web 1.0
Web 1.0 is the first generation of the World Wide Web, characterized by static pages and one-way communication. It was primarily used for information retrieval and basic web browsing.

Web 2.0
Web 2.0 is the second generation of the World Wide Web, characterized by user-generated content, social networking, and collaborative software. It emphasizes the ability of users to interact with and create content.

Web 1.0
Web 1.0 is the first generation of the World Wide Web, characterized by static pages and one-way communication. It was primarily used for information retrieval and basic web browsing.

Web 2.0
Web 2.0 is the second generation of the World Wide Web, characterized by user-generated content, social networking, and collaborative software. It emphasizes the ability of users to interact with and create content.

Web 2.0
Web 2.0 is the second generation of the World Wide Web, characterized by user-generated content, social networking, and collaborative software. It emphasizes the ability of users to interact with and create content.