Environmental and Social Governance (ESG) Reporting

Environmental and Social Governance (ESG) Reporting is a key component of a company's overall reporting strategy. It provides stakeholders with information on the company's environmental, social, and governance performance. This information is used to assess the company's risk profile and its ability to create long-term value. ESG reporting is becoming increasingly important as investors and other stakeholders increasingly consider these factors in their decision-making. The following table provides an overview of the key components of ESG reporting.
